THE VOICE is finally able to give an update on the issue of fees for paper bills.

On 26 October 2018, after many delays, a decision was made by the Consumer Affairs Ministers at their Forum. Here is the decision in full:

“Ministers attending considered the Decision Regulation Impact Statement on paper billing fees. Ministers agreed to encourage businesses not to charge vulnerable or disadvantaged consumers to receive paper bills by providing a strict twelve month period to increase the subscription to their existing exemption programs (option 2 in the Decision Regulation Impact Statement). Ministers expect this approach will mitigate consumer harm and detriment for vulnerable and disadvantaged consumers while minimising regulatory costs for businesses. Ministers issued an explicit warning to business that if the increase in exemption program subscription is not met, Ministers will favourably consider a complete ban on paper billing fees”.

What this seems to say is that businesses must be able to show over the next twelve months that they are giving more exemptions from paper bill fees. If not, the Ministers will ban paper bill fees.

When CPSA rang the federal Treasury to ask for a copy (electronic!) of the Decision Regulation Impact Statement referred to in the decision, it was told that not the Treasury but the Office of Best Practice Regulation would publish the Decision Regulation Impact Statement.

CPSA then asked for a contact in the Office of Best Practice Regulation, so that we could ask them to send us a copy.

“But they don’t have it!”, exclaimed the Treasury official.

“When once we give it to them in a couple of weeks”, replied the Treasury official, sounding exasperated.

In a nutshell, Treasury had the document but wouldn’t give CPSA a copy, even though the relevant media release referred to it.

Meanwhile there are a number of questions:

Can you get an exemption if you are not vulnerable or disadvantaged but just want to receive your bill in the post?

How many exemptions do businesses have to achieve and who checks whether they have?

What is so difficult about saying that anyone who insists on receiving a paper bill should get one without being charged?

Businesses have twelve months to take the ministerial encouragement on fees for paper bills to heart. This takes us to October 2019.

THE VOICE will keep you posted.
CPSA Aged Care Prize Competition #6 – the final one!

Print disability
RPH stands for Radio for the Print Handicapped. There are eight of these radio stations in Australia. Almost five million Australians live with a print disability. Causes include dyslexia, literacy impairment, attention deficit disorder and vision impairment. Radio reading services enable all Australians to participate in the community’s political, cultural and social life.

They broadcast to all Australians with a print disability, but under the radio licence given out by the Australian Government, they can only broadcast in the main cities of Australia where 75 per cent of Australians live.

The other 25 per cent live outside the cities. Those with a print disability living outside the city boundaries are forgotten by the Australian Government even though they still pay their taxes like their cousins in the cities.

Many millions of tax payers’ money are finding their way to the cities. The other 25 per cent live outside the cities.

Those with a print disability are still being forgotten by the Australian Government even though they still pay their taxes like their cousins in the cities.

Many millions of tax payers’ money are finding their way to the management of RPH and the outcome is not reaching the heights it should be.

SAPTO inaction
I AM a 77 year old veteran. My income consists of my Defence Force Retirement and Death Benefit superannuation to which I contributed 5.5% of my salary for 31 years, coupled with a small Commonwealth Public Service (PSS) superannuation to which I similarly contributed for seven years. This income is supplemented by a part Age Pension.

In 2013, I was granted a Seniors and Pensioners Tax Offset (SAPTO) of $1,563 in my Income Tax return, which resulted in tax refund of $638. Over the years since then, my SAPTO has gradually been reduced, and in 2017 I received nil SAPTO and had to pay the ATO $622. This year, I had a tax liability of approximately $1,000.

My Commonwealth superannuation income is adjusted twice annually in accordance with CPI movement with the result that my DVA and PSS pensions are increased accordingly with a corresponding reduction in the part Age Pension.

Inaction by the Australian Government in not adjusting the SAPTO thresholds since 2013 has significantly reduced the income and standard of living of Australia’s most vulnerable.

All Seniors and Pensioners who currently qualify for SAPTO and all those who no longer qualify are urged to write to their local Member of Parliament seeking to have the SAPTO thresholds reviewed and adjusted annually by the CPI. The situation gets worse each year and is an indication of how the Government treats the elderly.

Tech Savvy Seniors 2019
SENIORS in regional areas and those who speak a language other than English are the focus of the NSW Government’s popular Tech Savvy Seniors program in 2019 with $500,000 to connect a diverse range of people across the State.

Minister for Ageing Tanya Davies announced that the Tech Savvy Seniors program will be delivered in almost 200 locations in 2019, including the towns of Walcha, Kempsey and Oberon. The program is now being delivered in twelve languages.

“We’re proud to expand the availability of courses to more seniors, with new locations in regional NSW and 12 languages now on offer,” Mrs Davies said.

“Older people often experience higher rates of social isolation and mobility issues, especially in regional areas, which is why we are empowering seniors to learn how to use computers, tablets and smartphones to stay connected online”, the Minister said.

Delivered in partnership with Telstra, Tech Savvy Seniors provides free or low-cost training through a network of community colleges and libraries across NSW.

Tech Savvy Seniors has supported thousands of seniors to boost their digital skills, with more older people trained than anticipated thanks to an increase in the available places from 6,500 to 9,000 each year.

If you want to find out where the nearest Tech Savvy Seniors course to you is, ring CPSA on 1800 451 488.
Social housing to automatically deduct rent
THE AUSTRALIAN Government may soon enable state and territory housing authorities to deduct rent and other payments from tenants’ Centrelink payments.

The Social Services Legislation Amendment (Housing Affordability) Bill 2017 is currently before the House of Representatives.

The Bill introduces the framework for a new Automatic Rent Deduction Scheme (ARDS) that enables rent, utilities, rental arrears and amounts for damages to be deducted from the income support payments of social housing tenants automatically.

There is already a voluntary Rent Deduction Scheme in place, which gives social housing tenants the choice of having their rent and other charges deducted from their payments.

ARDS, the new compulsory rent deduction scheme, makes sense if applied to people who fail to pay their rent. ARDS will help prevent homelessness.

In NSW, the vast majority of social housing tenants will not be affected, as only tenants with poor rent payment histories will be signed up to ARDS.

ARDS is not without drawbacks. For example, there is the complication of responsibility for repair costs. If providers can automatically deduct repair bills this may make it even more difficult for vulnerable tenants to dispute those bills.

Another example is where a provider might deduct a large outstanding rental obligation in a way that leaves the tenant destitute. For people living on a limited income, unexpected costs related to illness, bills or fines can throw finances into disarray. In times of emergency, people may need flexibility to manage competing financial priorities. It remains to be seen how ARDS will accommodate these issues.

Let CPSA know what you think of ARDS.

NSW Labor announces retirement village ombudsman

NSW LABOR will establish an ombudsman for NSW retirement village and residential land lease community residents if elected in the 2019 state election.

This one-ups the NSW Government’s announcement in June this year of plans to implement a retirement village ambassador who would be responsible for enforcing a code of conduct.

The focus on retirement villages comes after a joint ABC and Fairfax Media investigation into the retirement village sector uncovered exorbitant fees and complex contracts that some argue amount to elder abuse.

The exposé prompted the Government to launch an inquiry into retirement villages in NSW. Although an ombudsman was recommended in forty submissions and was raised at most of the inquiry’s consultative community forums, the inquiry’s final report did not recommend an ombudsman.

Instead, the final report recommended that, rather than another body being established, the services provided by Fair Trading should be expanded.

Renting law review has some wins but also a big loss

THE RESIDENTIAL Tenancies (Review) Act passed the NSW Parliament on 26 October 2018 and while the changes are positive, they don’t go far enough.

Wins in the Act include establishing rental housing standards for safety and liveability, allowing tenants to more easily make minor modifications and improved flexibility for tenants in cases of domestic and family violence.

The Act also changes how break-lease fees are applied when tenants break a fixed-term lease. Break fees will now be calculated on a sliding scale, based on how much of the fixed term is left, ranging from an equivalent of one week’s rent to four weeks’ rent.

The Act caps rent increases to once per year, and whilst this is a good step, it is not enough to address the issue. Landlords can still increase the rent as much as they want after twelve months.

CPSA will continue to campaign for justification of rent increases in excess of Consumer Price Index increases.

Disappointingly, no-grounds evictions have not been banned. As long as tenants can be legally evicted for no reason, the other changes of the review are undermined. For example, if a landlord wants to increase the rent more than once every twelve months or doesn’t like the tenant’s request for minor repairs or modifications, the landlord can evict the tenant.

CPSA will continue to campaign for an end to no-grounds evictions.

My Health Record changes

TWO MY Health Record changes have been proposed by the Australian Government to make My Health Record acceptable to people concerned about their private medical information.

If the changes are voted through, personal information collected in the My Health Record system can’t be disclosed to law enforcement agencies and government agencies without a court order or an order by a judicial officer or the healthcare recipient’s consent. Violations are punishable by up to two years’ imprisonment and/or fines of up to $126,000 for an individual and up to $630,000 for corporate entities.

The other change is a requirement to permanently delete health information for a person if they have cancelled their My Health Record.

The deadline by which people can opt out of My Health Record before they are assigned an account has been extended from 30 November 2018 to 31 January 2019.

Australian life expectancy

THE LIFE expectancy gap between Australian men and women continues to narrow with Aussie males born today having an estimated life expectancy of 80.5 years, compared with 84.6 years for females, according to the latest figures released from the Australian Bureau of Statistics.

Australian males can now expect to live 10.8 years longer than the world average of 69.7 years, according to the United Nations 2015-2020 estimates.

Female life expectancy in 2017 remained the same as the previous year (84.6 years) and compares favourably with the global average of 74.3 years.
THE CPSA Conference has once again come and gone with great success. There was an impressive turnout of Members at the Rydges Hotel in Surry Hills.

Conference was packed with lively grassroots policy discussion, which will keep CPSA busy for another year.

Two new Association Life Members, Valmai Graham and Joyce Webb were presented with their well-deserved awards and Bush Telegraph gave all present the opportunity to hear reports on Branch and Affiliate activities and achievements over the last year. There was also an impressive list of speakers on topics close to the heart of CPSA Members.

Dr Michael Wynne of Aged Care Crisis headed up the list with an impassioned presentation on aged care in Australia and how its present woes are caused by allowing the system to drift away from its basis in the community to a place where profits reign supreme and the interests of care recipients are secondary.

Dr Wynne pointed out that the US nursing home system provides twice the care hours per resident as the Australian system, yet the reported incidence of non-compliance in Australia over the years has been far less than in the US system. This is impossible, according to Dr Wynne, who said it showed that Australia is not serious about quality of care and how it is measured.

Thea Bray of the Public Interest Advocacy Centre answered the question ‘Why are energy prices so high?’ Prices have increased by about 56 per cent over 10 years, but bills have increased by far less, about 35 per cent, as a result of energy efficient appliances and solar panels.

The energy companies that send out the bills are not the problem. Increases to network costs have been the biggest factor in increasing bills and these are the result of over-investment due to the incorrect forecasting of increased electricity use. Meeting stricter reliability and bushfire standards is also an important factor.

Diana Bernard, who is Manager of Education and Special Projects with the Seniors Rights Service, spoke about financial rights and vulnerabilities within the context of abuse of older people. Abuse of older people is any act which causes harm to an older person and is carried out by someone they know and trust. The abuser may be close family, a partner, a friend, a care worker or a neighbour and it can be unintentional or deliberate.

Call CPSA on 1800 451 488 for copies of the presentations of these speakers. They will also be attached to the Conference minutes which will be available early 2019.

2018 CPSA Annual General Meeting

The 2018 AGM saw the election of Sue Latimer, Stuart Carter, Victor Borg, Neville Fahy, Shirley Bains, Peter Knox and Brian Buckett to the CPSA Executive, Greg Farmilo & Co as the new Auditor, and John Hollis as the Returning Officer for the coming year. Of the three proposed changes to CPSA’s constitution, only one gained the necessary 75 per cent of Delegates’ votes. Minutes of the AGM will be available early 2019.
IN RECENT issues, THE VOICE has covered the plight of older people who have become unemployed and live on Newstart.

Newstart stands at $550.20 per fortnight for singles and $993.40 for a couple.

You could be forgiven for thinking that only a few older Australians have to rely on Newstart, but in reality the over-55s are the biggest category of Newstart recipients, making up 22 per cent of all recipients. That’s 185,197 people on 31 March 2018.

The smallest category is the youngest category. There are 143,423 Newstart (and Youth Allowance) recipients aged 16 to 24. That’s 17 per cent, significantly less than all other age groups.

Newstart increasingly is becoming a Clayton’s Age Pension: the pension you have when you don’t have a pension.

And it’s getting worse.

The number of over-55s on Newstart is set to increase due to two factors.

First, the number of people over 55 as a proportion of the overall Australian population is increasing, which means more will spend at least some time on Newstart before they reach Age Pension age.

Second, the Age Pension age is now 65.5, but will have gone up to 67 by 1 July 2023. This means a longer wait for over-55s on Newstart.

More older people on the dole for longer.

With the number of over-55s on Newstart set to top 200,000 soon, Newstart has become an ageing issue. Newstart is 40 per cent less than the Age Pension. Even if you own your home, imagine paying rates or strata fees, let alone maintenance, on that sort of money. Imagine how impossible it would be to manage if you don’t own your own home.

The current campaign spearheaded by the Australian Council of Social Services to increase Newstart by $75 a week, would bring Newstart up to only 76 per cent of the Age Pension. It is a good campaign though, and one CPSA wholeheartedly supports. Older Australians owe it to older Australians to support this campaign.

NEWSTART, the Clayton’s Age Pension

ARE you retired and addicted to term deposits? This is the title of a new booklet produced by CPSA to shine a light on the truth about term deposits.

Interest rates are at all-time lows. Term deposit rates don’t even match the higher deeming rate of 3.25%. Times are tough for pensioners who have always had their money in term deposits.

If you are one of those pensioners, if you think term deposits are ‘no risk’, if you think investing in shares is a casino, and if you think there aren’t any financial planners who can be trusted, this booklet is something you should read.

Are you retired and addicted to term deposits? is a free booklet. It offers a comparison of the returns on term deposits and shares in the ten years from October 2007, just before the Global Financial Crisis hit. And guess what? Shares did better than term deposits.

Robots, apps and aged care

OFTEN when aged care providers talk about the use of digital technology and automation, what they are really talking about is reducing operational costs.

Technology can be useful in aged care. The shocking footage shown in the Four Corners program on nursing homes was shot using miniscule digital cameras. It’s doubtful a Royal Commission would have been called without the availability and use of that technology, which has great potential to improve the physical safety of residents if used widely.

Another example of digital technology that can be very useful in aged care is automated pain recognition in people with advanced dementia who are unable to speak. This technology records and analyses a person’s facial expressions. Detection of pain in non-communicative people has always, to a greater or lesser extent, depended on facial expressions.

But perhaps we should be less enthusiastic about Pepper the Robot, who has been let loose in two Queensland nursing homes on a trial basis. Pepper is a robotic assistant optimised to engage with people through conversation and a touch screen.

Regardless of whether Pepper would be an enduring hit, or a hit at all, with nursing home residents, the deployment of Pepper has about it the smell of an attempt to reduce operational costs by replacing underpaid staff with an even cheaper gadget.

There’s technology and then there’s technology.

Retirement villages and aged care

RETRIEMENT villages are very suitable places for people to receive aged care at home, because a village concentrates care recipients in an area and care workers don’t have to spend hours in traffic to move from one to another.

CPSA supports a model of aged care being delivered in retirement village type accommodation units clustered around a nursing home for the very few people who cannot or can no longer be cared for at home.

ECH has carried out a study which found a Level 5 HCP would allow more people to remain at home and die at home. Home Care Packages currently go to Level 4.

On the bright side, the Inside Aged Care report indicates that the industry is realising it has a public trust problem.

Now the industry has to realise that it is its abysmal performance which is the cause of it.

Trust in the industry is low, not because things look bad, but because they are bad.

The Inside Aged Care report was released just a week after the Australian Government published its report on the Inquiry into the Quality of Care in Residential Aged Care Facilities in Australia.

The Inquiry reported that there are “major deficiencies within the aged care sector” and that “this is simply not acceptable in a nation like Australia”.

Perceptions of aged care industry are unsurprisingly terrible

THERE is a crisis of public confidence in aged care, and for a good reason.

The Inside Aged Care report presented at a major aged care provider conference recently reveals that only 18 per cent of Australians trust the aged care industry and only 13 per cent think it is open and transparent.

Trust in the industry is low, not because things look bad, but because they are bad.

are on a lower-level package than they should be and this proportion is rising. People assessed as needing an HCP who can’t get one are stuck on the basic care provided through the Commonwealth Home Support Programme and, at the other end, people needing an HCP Level 3 or 4 who can’t get one are going into nursing homes.

The business case for a massive increase in the number of Home Care Packages is compelling, as is the business case for introducing HCP Level 5. No one disputes this.

The ECH study looked at twelve people aged over 70 who were not dealing with a complex terminal condition but were already on an HCP and were considered likely candidates for entry into a nursing home.

The study found that by receiving appropriate home support, ten of the twelve managed to avoid permanent admission to residential care.

The additional cost of doing so came to a maximum of $11,000 additional to their HCP subsidy, not much in the scheme of things and certainly cheaper than a nursing home.

More funding.

Second, the aged care industry is petrified the same will happen to it as what happened to the banks and financial planners, so it’s setting up war rooms to prepare its quaking executives for Commission hearings.

War rooms is the actual term the industry uses, an unhappy choice of language given Royal Commissioners and their staff read newspapers too.

Third, the industry is keen to continue with reforms already in train, essentially dismissing the idea that aged care is in crisis.

It fails to appreciate that the aged care reforms now being introduced, including the new Aged Care Quality Commission, the Single Aged Care Quality Framework and the Workforce Strategy, are solutions cobbled together between the Government and the aged care industry in a way designed to preserve as much as possible the status quo, protecting the interest of the Government worried about its aged care expenditure and the interests of the industry concerned with making sure the current levels of subsidies continue to adequately feed its profits.

The new Commission, the new Quality Framework and the new Workforce Strategy are crony non-solutions and will be trotted out during Royal Commission hearings as proof that Government and industry have everything in hand. Nothing to see here, Commissioners! CPSA hopes the Commissioners will prove smarter than to fall for that.

Welcoming, defensive, dismissive: industry response to Aged Care Royal Commission

THE GOVERNMENT’S message is that all’s well with aged care and that’s why we need a Royal Commission into it.

Calling an inquiry is a standard Government response to any crisis.

The sheer number of inquiries into aged care gives an indication of how many crises there have been. It got to the point where the Government would have looked silly if it had called another inquiry into aged care, so it called the only inquiry that would still be taken seriously, a Royal Commission.

From any Government’s point of view, the purpose of an inquiry is primarily a play for time. The secondary purpose may be that it wants things fixed, but primarily calling an inquiry gives it breathing space. It is seen to be doing something, when in reality the crisis continues to fester. This applies to all inquiries, including Royal Commissions.

The Aged Care Royal Commission will not report until well after the next federal election.

The aged care industry’s response to the Royal Commission announcement has been threefold: welcoming, defensive and dismissive.

First, the industry welcomes the Royal Commission as an opportunity to make the case for more funding.

Second, the aged care industry is petrified the same will happen to it as what happened to the banks and financial planners, so it’s setting up war rooms to prepare its quaking executives for Commission hearings.

Third, the industry is keen to continue with reforms already in train, essentially dismissing the idea that aged care is in crisis.

CPSA Funding

CPSA receives funding support from the NSW Government Departments of Family & Community Services and Health, and the Australian Government Department of Social Services.

New CPSA reports

CPSA has produced two reports for the Department of Family and Community Services. These reports are Coping with Bereavement in Older Age and Housing Insecurity and Older People in NSW. Contact CPSA if you would like a copy of these reports and we can email or post them to you.

Quality Aged Care Action Group (QACAG)

QACAG is a community group fighting for high quality care for older people in nursing homes and community aged services. Members include people receiving aged care services, their partners, family and friends, nurses and retired nurses, people working in aged care and other people committed to aged care.

The group meets every two months, usually in a Sydney CBD location and a focus of the group is to help educate and empower the community to demand high quality aged care. For more information, or to become a member, contact the NSW Nurses and Midwives Association on (02) 8595 1234 and ask to speak to someone about QACAG or email qacag@nswnma.asn.au

CPSA Aged Care Competition #5 Winners

In the last two editions of THE VOICE, CPSA ran its 5th competition.

The question was: Which agency do you contact if you want to find out if a nursing home was found to have met all of the care quality requirements during an accreditation audit?

The correct answer was: MyAgedCare.

Due to the number of correct entries (2) for Competition #5: there are only two winners of $50 gift vouchers:

- Geraldine Melia
- Carol Graham

Garden of Remembrance

CORRIMAL Branch sadly announces the recent death of Les Walton. Les was a long time Member and Branch President until ill-health forced his retirement from official positions. In spite of his ill-health, Les continued to attend meetings and functions.

Les was experienced in meeting procedures and had studied the Constitution. His natural cheery manner made new Members feel instantly at home. He had a great ability to identify problems and he had the courage to do what was needed to get things sorted.

We will miss his optimistic approach in all matters and most of all we will miss him. Nell Walton is also a long time member and it was at a Branch meeting they met (both had lost their spouse to illness). As far as anyone can find out, the only wedding gift the Corrimal Branch ever presented was to Nell and Les, as we took some credit for their happiness, and it is so recorded in our Minute Book of the time.
